HEALING. HOPE. FREEDOM.

Samay's childhood completely changed when she was two years old and her father committed suicide. Because her father had gambled away all her family's money before his death, Samay grew up in desperate poverty. There was never enough.

When Samay was fourteen, she became involved with a group of friends from her school who constantly skipped classes and abused drugs and alcohol. These girls also worked at a karaoke bar and Samay decided to join them. She began earning money drinking at the bar with customers. It wasn't long before the karaoke bar owners coerced Samay to have sex with customers for additional money. Samay was easily manipulated and the owners took the majority of the money that she earned. This ruthless cycle of addiction, manipulation, and abuse continued until law enforcement raided the bar and brought Samay to Rapha International.

Rapha's legal staff partnered with the police resulting in the traffickers being sentenced to prison time. In addition to legal services, Samay participated in regular trauma-informed counseling so that she would be positioned to make healthy choices for her future. The Rapha caregivers were amazed by the progress Samay made and lovingly supported her journey of healing. When Samay left Rapha's aftercare campus, she was a confident and mature young woman who was committed to her new life of sustainable freedom. Rapha social workers have continued to monitor Samay's journey and have provided her with the financial assistance to finish her education.

I had never experienced warmth and love until I came to Rapha.
